Rent-Roll Truth Check

Property: _____ Date: _____

A rent roll is a claim. Bank deposits are behavior. Leases are terms. All three must agree before you believe the income.

1. The three-document rule

Work every occupied lot across all three documents. The rent roll says what the seller claims. The lease says what the tenant agreed to. The deposit says what actually landed in the bank. A lot is verified only when all three match.

2. Cross-check worksheet

Lot #	Rent roll says (rent, status)	Lease says	Deposit shows	Match? Y / N

3. The math check

Rent roll gross monthly x 12 (claimed annual): _____

Actual 12-month deposits (real annual): _____

Gap (claimed minus real): _____

Explain every dollar of the gap in writing. Timing and concessions explain small gaps. Nothing honest explains a large one.

4. Anomaly flags

- [ ] Deposits well below collections. The money is not landing where the roll says it should.
- [ ] Concession-stuffed rent inflating the roll. Free months and discounts booked as full rent.
- [ ] Manager or relative free lots. Comped lots that will cost you the day you enforce rent.
- [ ] Backdated or unsigned leases. Paperwork written to match the roll, not the tenant.
- [ ] Round-number deposits that match the OM instead of tenant payments. Deposits that look like the brochure, not a rent roll.
- [ ] Seasonal deposits presented as stabilized. Peak-season cash sold as year-round income.

5. What the gap means

Small gaps are timing and concessions. Large or patterned gaps mean a different deal than the one advertised. Take the pattern to your CPA and attorney, then reprice or walk.

Working the flags

- [ ] For every flagged lot: pull the lease, the last 3 deposits, and the tenant's story from the manager.
- [ ] Put the gap in writing to the seller and broker before the 45 to 60 day diligence clock runs out.
- [ ] Reprice on real income, not claimed income. The roll is an advertisement until deposits confirm it.
